

2-day Infant Toddler Institute

October 26–27, 2018

with Lorrie Baird & Anne Marie Coughlin

Living, Loving, and Learning Together with Infants and Toddlers

Over the past several years, the field of early childhood education has seen some powerful change. Advancements in science and psychology has us asking ourselves new kinds of questions that are helping us to shift the kinds of relationships we have with young children.

- Who is the child and what is the role of childhood?
- Who am I with the child and how do I provide a space where learning can happen in a loving and respectful way?

During this two day interactive experience, we will dig into questions like these together in an attempt to help us to find deeper meaning in our work.

Participants can expect to;

- explore meaningful ways of being together that foster a sense of community, respect, and well-being for both children and ourselves,
- find emotional and intellectual engagement in our work,
- have opportunities to express multiple points of view, share stories, and explore new ideas together.
